Abstract

In every human society, religion performs significant roles. It is one of the most important institutional structures that make up the total social system most, especially in Yorùbá society where religion and the divinities are in charge of all human activities. Religion and the divinities are regarded as the sources of ethical and moral behaviours, public order and inner peace of the individual persons. They become even more active during economic, political and health-threatening crises and situations that could affect individual, groups, communities or cities. An example of such a critical situation was the COVID-19 pandemic that ravaged the world. It is on this background that we want to further examine the significance of these divinities, particularly in times of epidemics and the role that Ifá can play in such a situation. Africa is a continent endowed with rich traditions and Nigeria, particularly the Yorùbá is not less endowed and blessed with knowledge and means of solving problems physically and spiritually through these divinities. These innate knowledge and wisdom are believed, can still be employed in this contemporary time for the betterment of the society and the world at large. Twenty priests and priestesses of some prominent and principal Yorùbá divinities like Ògún, Ifá, Ọ̀ṣun, Ọ̀bàtálá and Èṣù were interviewed personally and through Telephone calls for their views and their views content analysed. The study revealed that the Yorùbá have confidence in Olódùmarè and the divinities he sent to help us in all our everyday affairs including diseases and epidemics.

Introduction

Belief in Òrìṣà- divinities constitutes the second pillar of the Yorùbá belief system. One may ask who these Òrìṣà- divinities are. Òrìṣà are beings brought forth by Olodumare. They are called Òrìṣà by the Yorùbá because of the circumstances that surrounded their coming into being (E. Bolaji Idowu, 1960). The word Òrìṣà, according to Idowu (1960, p56) is derived from an incident that happened to Òrìṣà- nla through his slave Àtòwóḍá that he brought home to care and work for him. Àtòwóḍá killed his master with a rolling stone that crushed him to bits and scattered the flesh. Ọ̀rúnmilá was able to gather the parts in a calabash, took it to Ìrànjé, the city of the arch-divinity. He deposited a portion of the pieces and distributed the rest all over the world as ohun tí a rí ṣà – what was found and gathered of Òrìṣà nlá. Thus, the word Òrìṣà was from the pieces of the Òrìṣà-nla gathered together. (Adeoye, 1985) However, Adeoye's (1985, p26-30) explanation of the word Òrìṣà is slightly different. According to him, the Akosejaye – destiny finding of every man on earth was done to know which Òrìṣà they belonged. Those he was able to identify that day became Òrìṣà. Another name for this Òrìṣà is Imọ̀lẹ̀ and because he was able to identify and pick Irinwó-four hundred, their name became Irinwómọ̀lẹ̀. It was this Irinwómọ̀lẹ̀ that was later shortens to Irumole. When Ọ̀rúnmilá was added to the number, it became Okanlenirinwo – four hundred and one Imale. The names Òrìṣà, Imọ̀lẹ̀ and Irúnmọ̀lẹ̀ are used inter changeably by the Yorùbá. According to Adeoye, these four hundred and one Òrìṣà/Imole did not come to the world at once. Rather, they came in thirteen batches.

They came into the world, lived helped and performed spectacular things and many of them became object of worship and reference till today, most especially, Obatala also known as Òrìṣà-nla, Oyigi, Ajalorun, Ogun, Ọ̀rúnmilá, Esu, Sanponna, Osun, Oya, Sango, Ọ̀bà, and so on. Some of their spectacular duties were their protection and prevention during Àjàkálẹ̀ àrùn- epidemics like the present COVID19 pandemics that is ravaging the world.

Literature Review on the Origin of the Yorùbá

The history and myths surrounding the existence and coming into being of the Yorùbá are numerous of which adequate information has not been ascertained. While some believed that Ilé-Ifẹ̀ is the birth place of the Yorùbá nation, some historians are of the opinion that the Yorùbá migrated there. However, because they have stayed too long at Ilé-Ifẹ̀, they can no longer remember that they migrated from another place to their present homeland. To consolidate and validate their claim, Obatala and Odùdùwà who were neither mythical nor heavenly beings, rather, human who played significant roles in the nation of the Yorùbá the names of these two personalities were added to the existing myths of Yorùbá creation. Particularly Odùdúwà to the high position he deserved in the transformation of Yorùbá civilization during his reign as Olofin of Yorùbá nation (Akintoye, 2010, p 2-3).

A similar history was told by Samuel Johnson (Johnson, 1969, p3) that the Yorùbá sprung from Lamurudu one of the kings in Mecca from where the Yorùbá migrated to Ilé-Ifè and finally settled among the people they met there. The Yorùbá historians also traced the origin of the Yorùbá people to the middle Niger around the Niger Benue Confluence thousands of years ago in the southern Nupe and Northern Yorùbá groups, the Yàgbà Okun Yorùbá. From there, the historians claimed the Yorùbá spread out to the south and the west (Ajayi, 2025). This may responsible for the reason why an informant claimed that the divinities, on their arrival on earth first touched down at Ìkòlè in the present Ekiti State, from where they migrated to Ilé-Ifè. The Yagba towns of the past in the South western area where Ìpaò, Ìrèlè, Òkè Àkò and Ìtápáji annexed by Aiyédé Ekiti. All these towns and villages were formerly under Ekiti North local government area with headquarter in Ìkòlè Ekiti. However, today, these towns and villages are now under two local governments. Ìpaò, Ìrèlè, Òkè Àkò and Ìtápáji are now under Ìkòlè local government area and Ayédé that annexed these towns and villages is now under Oyè local government area that was carved out of former Ekiti North Local Government area in 1996 when Ekiti State was created. Therefore, claiming that the Yorùbá were from the Niger Benue Confluence may not be wrong since Ìkòlè (Ìkòlè Aye) share border with Niger Benue confluence (Dada, 2025). According to the information gathered, because the Òrìṣà first landed in Ìkòlè Ayé in the area we are talking about here gave Ogun, one of the Òrìṣà the opportunity to pave way for the rest of the Òrìṣà since he was the only Òrìṣà with iron cutlass that is good for such a task (Adewale, 2025).

Mythologically, this may be true based of the fact that it is very common in the Yorùbá incantations to hear words like nígbàtí àwọn Irúnmọ̀lẹ̀ nt' Ìkòlè ọ̀run bọ̀ wá s' Ìkòlè ayé- when the divinities were coming from heaven to the earth. This is a clear indication that in the city of heaven, there is a departed place called Ìkòlè Ọ̀run that can be liken to modern Airport and Ìkòlè aye, arrival where they first landed before dispersing to various places. Ìkòlè, which is in the present Ekiti State is in the same axis with Yagba – Okun people. Therefore, there is possibility that rather than referring to Okun area, it could be Ìkòlè Èkiti since it is not too far away from this Okun community (Ojo, 2025). Also, the Okun people of Yagba land till today claim that they are all Yorùbá speaking from Ilé-Ifè and the old Oyo (Iyekolo 2006, p24). Even, Ìyá Gbẹ̀dẹ̀, who claimed that they came together from various locations in Okun land averse that they came from Odùdúwà land (Ayinmode, 2004, p24)? The Yagba people who claimed that they are Yorùbá are, according to Iyekolo (2000, p1), a descendant of a princess called Iya-Agba (old woman) who migrated from Oyo to settle at Atata-

Ika Meji (Abimbola, 1968, p118) also explained that:

Ere in Yagba west local government now in Kogi State. The name of the princess was shortened from Iya-Agba to “Yagba” that became the name of the community till today.

However, regardless of wherever they may claim the Yorùbá are from, to the Yorùbá, Ilé-Ifè remains the origin of their birth place and heaven was where they came from. Thus, according to Ologundudu (Ologundudu, 2008,), Ilé-Ifè was the spot where the Earth and life began. A place where the sun rose and the days of life began. Also, in support of this assertion is Makinde (2012, p14) who believed that headquarter of the Yorùbá Empire began at Ilé-Ifè, the origin of their birth place. A view also shared by Olupona (2011, p36) when he was explaining various names ascribed to Ilé-Ifè such as Ifè Oòdáyé – The expansive space where the world was created. That is, ritual creation occurred in Ilé-Ifè and Ifè Oòyèlàngbò ibi ojú ti mó wá – where the day downs and so on.

Theoretical Framework and Methodology

This study is best situated within the framework of Functionalism, particularly as advanced by scholars such as Émile Durkheim and Bronisław Malinowski, because the paper strongly presents Yoruba religion and the Òrìṣà tradition as social and spiritual institutions that sustain communal order, moral stability, healing, and protection during periods of crisis such as pandemics. The theory suitably explains how religion functions beyond mere belief by serving practical purposes in society through divination, sacrifice, herbal knowledge, ritual performance, and collective solidarity in moments of fear and uncertainty. The work also aligns with Indigenous Knowledge Systems theory, since it foregrounds Ifá corpus, oral traditions, sacred groves, herbal therapeutics, and ancestral wisdom as valid epistemological resources for understanding and responding to health emergencies within Yoruba cosmology. Methodologically, the study adopts a qualitative and ethnographic approach through the use of oral interviews, telephone conversations, textual analysis of Ifá verses, and interpretive examination of Ọ̀sá Mèjí within the Ifá corpus. The methodology is appropriate because it allows the researchers to explore lived religious experiences, indigenous interpretations of pandemics, and the socio-spiritual relevance of Yoruba divinities from the perspectives of priests, herbalists, and devotees within their cultural context.

The Yorùbá Religion and Her Divinities

The religion of the Yorùbá occupied their space and time. In everything they are religious. According to Idowu (1990, p5, religion forms the foundation all principle of life for the Yorùbá. All affairs of life belong to the deity and their responsibility and duty is to obey the dictate of the divinities. Therefore, from birth to death, and every stage of life, the divinities, is in charge of men's affairs. This is evident in Irosun Meji (Abimbola, 1968, p65) where Ifá says:

Adáná yá Òkéte*

Today, one may not border to make enquiry for an important thing like prestige when there are other factors that one would consider would bring it to the person seeking the help of Ifá for such. The religious belief of the Yorùbá centres on five major beliefs that can be called the five pillars of the Yoruba which are belief in God-Olodumare, who is at the peak of all beliefs. He is the one in charge of all things of which all other beings must bow for. According to the Yorùbá, Olodumare is the one responsible for the existence of all things in heaven and on earth. Similarly, the Yorùbá belief in the existence of Òrìṣà- divinities. According to the myth of creation, they assisted Olodumare in the creation of the earth. There is also belief in ẹ̀mí àìrí- spirits who are lesser in ranks to the Òrìṣà-divinities but also help Olódùmarè in one way or the other. Particularly in guiding natural resources created by Olódùmarè (Olaleye, 2022).

The Yoruba, likewise belief in Ònìlẹ̀- ancestors who are the living dead, though they are dead yet they are still interested in the affairs of the living most especially during difficult times. That is why the Yorùbá will say Òkú Olómọ kii sùn- a dead person that left children behind does not sleep. Therefore, to the Yorùbá, they are not dead but only change place and space. A very good example was a story narrated by one of the informants when she was kidnapped. According to her, it was revealed to her that it was her dead mother that prevented the kidnappers from using her for money ritual (Fajembola, 2025). Finally, there is a belief in the power of magic and medicine called mysterious powers. That is, the making use of available natural resources and tapping the invisible powers for man's purposes when the need arises. These five pillars are what constitute the religious belief of the Yorùbá.

General Views of the Yorùbá on Health and Pandemics

The desire of every African in general and the Yorùbá in particular, is to be healthy without which there is no life and man. Therefore, good health is a freedom from conditions that could jeopardize healthy life whether physically and spiritually. To attain this, adequate measures are taken by individuals, groups, villages, towns, cities and countries. The importance of living and appreciating good health is first noticeable from early morning Yorùbá greetings of ká à rọ̀ ọ̀, a à jí bí or sẹ́ a jí dá a dá a. These are form of greetings that is asking and cares about person's state of health. The person greeted will either answer positive or negative depending on the state of his/her health.

With a negative response, the problem becomes the problem of both parties and how to solve the problem would be the issue. However, the nature of the health challenge will determine the kind of solution that would be provided. Nevertheless, regardless of the health challenges physically or spiritually, the following measures can be taken one, the use of natural resources in the environment in terms of herbs and animal parts or whole. Preparation of these medicinal plants could be the use of leaf, bark and root that could be processed and applied through infusion, concoction, decoction, and tisane or maceration (Sofowora, 1993, p4). Two, there is also the use of words. These are sets of words spoken out in a particular sequence to conjure up forces to activate medicinal plants. A good example is:

Osanyinmole everything is committed into your hands today
I pay homage to Olubikin who first plucked leaf in the forest
I pay homage to Osanyinbikin who first uproots roots from the ground.
Reverence to Ajigbapo oogun ko
Who gave them grinding stone on that day
I pay homage to the father and mother
Reverence to those who have been collecting leaf before me
Homage to those who have been uprooting roots before me
Every leaf I pluck today must work for me.

Yoruba will say “À nkí á nsá, o ló ò m'ẹ̀ni ó kú- we are praising him, we are shouting words, yet you claim the ignorance of the person that dies” therefore, the Yoruba will say;

Three, the use of Èbọ-sacrifice that has to do with performing some rites to appease the divinities and some invisible elements after diagnosing through the use of Ifá divination system or through Osanyin the tutelary spirit of the herbalists. The divinities and some of these spiritual elements like Aje-witches and Ajogun are sometimes parts of major causes of ill-health, particularly Àjàkálẹ̀ àrùn- epidemics/pandemics that can kill in thousands when and if they are offended by man, maybe as a result of neglect or violation of one of their rules. Once they are appeased through offering of Ebo by given them what they delight in eating or what they dictate, it is believed that peace and calm will return to such a community. Epidemics/pandemics such as COVID 19, olóde or Ìgbóná-smallpox, onígá méjì-cholera etc are known as Àjàkálẹ̀ àrùn in Yoruba. It's devastating effect is not always forgotten in a hurry in any town, states, or country where it happens. As earlier said and adequately informed by some of the informants, Ajakale àrùn is a disease sometimes caused by the divinities and spiritual elements that move and spread it through the air. This is the reason why the effect and spread are always fast and devastating (Olokose, 2025). To combat the spread therefore, ewé akòko-newbouldia laevis (fertility leaf) is always advised to be hung by the door, most especially in places where the spread has not been reached because of its spiritual purpose and functions that will prevent the diseases and sickness from penetrating such a house (<https://m.facebook.com>, 2025).

There are number of cases of epidemics breakout that can be recorded in Yoruba society in sometime past. In the time of the divinities in Yorubaland, at Ile-Ife, during the time of Obatala and Oduduwa conflict, over who controls the city, there was an outbreak of smallpox in the camp of Obatala. It was this outbreak that puts an end to the conflict. The annual Itapa festival and the imagery of smallpox lesions painted on the bodies of Obatala priests with white chalk during this festival is a reminder of the epidemics by the Ife people till today (Ogundiran, 2020). Again, there was an outbreak of Pẹ̀pẹ̀, an infectious disease of the respiratory organs similar to COVID19 pandemics in the city of Oyo in 1831 (Johnson, 1969, pp215-216). There was an outbreak of a cholera epidemic in Ibadan in 1970 that affected over 1,384 persons (Lawoyin, 1999). Similarly, in November 2020, eight people were reported dead and ten hospitalised in a suspected cholera outbreak in Lagelu local government area, Ibadan (Akanbi, 2020). Also, there was a Kúrùkúrù outbreak in Itapa Ekiti in 19. From description, the epidemic may not be different from the modern-day misuses that affected and killed the young ones in the small community (Ajaja, 2026). However, in most of these outbreaks and some other ones, the groves, temples and shrines of these divinities always served as isolation centres. For instance, a victim of Ayelala in Okitipupa area of Ondo State will be taking to the shrine of Ayelala with all his or her property where he or she will die and be buried (<https://ilutitundiary.wordpress.com>, 2016).

The Significance of the Yorùbá divinities in Times of Pandemics and the Views of Ifá as found in Ọ̀sá Méjì

It was expressed a little while ago that the divinities, the witches and Ajogun are part of disease causation. This is so because whenever their laws and taboos are broken, they are bound to react negatively. However, having said that, they are the great protectors of their devotees, and the entire community. Their duties are to protect before, during and after an ugly situation like an epidemic to make sure it does not rear its head again. Once they are fed, the duty of the divinities is to make sure that there is no evil in the land. However, if it is a situation that is inevitable, they will inform the community through the priests who are the custodians and what to do to minimize the effect of such an epidemic as explained by Aladekomo (Personal Interview, 2025). In addition to offering of Èbọ-sacrifice, they can sometimes prescribe natural herbs in addition to the sacrifice. A question that may readily come to mind is, how do they relay their message to the people? The divinities do this through Ifá divination. We should note that there is no shrine, temple or grove where Ifá divination does as not take place except if prayers are not offered, once it is offered, to ascertain that the prayers had been answered, divination through kolanut will be carried out and in the process, such a god will reveal his message to his or her people through the priest that casts the kola nut.

Besides, there are some that speak directly with their priests. While some devotees may go on trance during which the divinities will speak through such devotees. Apart from casting kolanut at the shrines, temples or groves, there is also Ifá, the spokesperson of all the divinities that is always speak and protect his people through the Babaláwo by revealing what has happened in the past, what will happen now and in future. When Ọ̀rúnmìlà was on earth, he was going round helping people, and healing them of their ailments like the type we have in Ọ̀sá Méjì (Agboola, 1989, p142) when he traveled to Ọ̀fà and healed Ọ̀fà people of their ailments. Here, Ifá says:

Ifá ní wónó kí un mòjò mòjò
Ifá ní wónó kí un mejì mejì
Ifá pẹ̀lẹ̀ mòjò mòjò
Ifá pẹ̀lẹ̀ mejì mejì

After Ọ̀rúnmìlà had left the world, he is still speaking, but through his disciples called Babaláwó till today. During Ọ̀kè Ításẹ̀, an annual Ifá festival organised in remembrance of Ọ̀rúnmìlà, he used to speak to the world of what will happen the following year or in the near future. For instance, in 2018/2019 Ifá of the year which

However, the outcome of the wrath of the ancestors and of the super power was the COVID19 pandemic that ravaged and sent thousands of people to early grave, not only in Nigeria but all over the world. Besides, Ifá had stated this warning a year before

Research Findings

Though Ifá did not mention COVID19, epidemics or any form of sickness but anything that can exterminate human life massively, whether sickness or not is a war against humanity that Ifá was talking about in the Odù Ifá.

Besides, most of the time, Ifá always explain things bí ẹnà bí ọ̀wè – speak in proverbs and riddles. It is when the fulfillment comes that one will then understand what Ifá was saying and that is the reason why offering of Ẹ̀bọ–sacrifice that comes with divination is very important and crucial.

Findings also revealed that the roles of the divinities in every difficult situation is to warn ahead, prevent and protect their people from danger and the duty of the citizens is to obey and heed the warnings by offering Ẹ̀bọ-sacrifice approximately and on time to prevent calamity.

Recommendation

The creator that created humans in different colours, in different continents and regions could not be stupid. He created nature and spiritual entities for the benefit of humans. Therefore, if he decides to make use of the spirits and the so-called divinities for the benefit and safety of humans, we should not neglect his message. After all, we all believed that the creator is capable of using different and diverse means to disseminate his information to whomever he wishes at any time. Some through dreams, trance, hearing of audible words without seeing the person talking, through divination, signs and symbols. Disregarding his messages through any of these mediums is to human peril.

Conclusion

was Ìrètẹ̀-Ìkà (Fagbohun, 2019, pp13-14), Ifá warned that people should give due respect to taboo, law, rules and regulations of the city so that people will not incur the wrath of the ancestors or the super power.

All over the world and in every religion, and at every point in time, there have always been agents of that give warnings for impending dangers. They may be prophets, angels or whatever names they bear or called their duties is to prevent and help protect the life and prosperities of their citizens? This is exactly what the divinities are doing in the Yorùbá society till date; unfortunately, foreign religions, western education and civilization have dealt a devastating blow to this role. Take it or leave it, foreign divinities cannot protect Yorubaland because Olódùmarè is not stupid by giving the Yorùbá Ọ̀rìṣà different from those of foreign nations. African/Yoruba divinities will understand their peculiar situations than foreign divinities. Though we are not saying African/Yoruba should not embrace other people's culture but not to the detriment of theirs. We would not have been waiting for vaccine from foreign lands if we take seriously the potentials and the divinities of the land because they are capable of preventing COVID19 through sacrifice and the use of natural herbs we are notable for. This will be better than the vaccine that may have side effects on the people that took it. It is high time we value the divinities given heritage.
